

For immediate release

17 August 2011

Creative Places move into heart of Cambridge R&D community

Science park specialists, Creative Places, have moved into new premises in the centre of Cambridge, one of the key global centres of R&D activity for the future.

The firm has worked on the outskirts of the City since 2008, establishing themselves as market leaders in research, R&D and creative industry property consultancy.

Cambridge is renowned for having an environment rich in academic research excellence and high tech companies and the move into Kings Parade will situate the team at the centre of that activity.

Creative Places offer a wealth of experience in property consultancy, development and environment creation. Their core services include project feasibility, strategy development, soft infrastructure creation and joint ventures, not just at science parks but increasingly in University campuses, hospitals and city centres.

CEO Jonathan Burroughs said, "We are really excited to be moving to the vibrant heart of Cambridge, a matter of yards away from places where so many great scientific break-throughs have been made. It is truly one of the most creative places in the world."

For more information contact Creative Places on 01223 359840, visit creativeplaces.com or follow @creativeplaces